

Prior HBCU Conversation — Earlier Similar Comments

Before the August 25, 2025 conversation, Allan had previously told me a similar story about attending an HBCU recruiting event where he believed the company had no real intent to hire candidates from the event. I shared those comments with others in real time after the prior conversation.

August 25, 2025 — Conversation About Schedule, Family Impact, and Lack of Opportunities

On or about August 25, 2025, I had a conversation with Allan that lasted approximately an hour or more. I discussed the impact my fixed 1:30 PM–10:00 PM schedule was having on my family, including that my son Atlas had to stay with my mother during the week because my shift ended around the time he goes to sleep.

I also raised concerns about being stuck on the waitlist, not receiving projects, not being selected for opportunities, and not being able to move despite strong performance.

August 25, 2025 — Allan’s “Blockade” Statement

During the conversation, I asked Allan directly whether I was not receiving opportunities because of something I was doing wrong, because leadership did not want me to receive opportunities, or because something was preventing me from moving forward.

I asked whether there was a barrier stopping me from advancing and whether there was any way I could get past it. Allan told me, in substance, that there was a “blockade” and that he did not believe I would be able to get past it.

I then asked whether he thought I should go to HR. Allan responded, in substance:

“It’s up to you.”

After this conversation, I shared the “blockade” statement with a coworker, including Alison Murphy, in real time.

August 25, 2025 — HBCU Recruiting Comments

During the same conversation, Allan discussed an HBCU recruiting event he had attended. He stated that he had been asked to travel to recruit at an HBCU, possibly in Texas. He said he spoke with candidates, collected their information, and later heard from candidates that they had been denied shortly after the event.

Allan stated that he later learned the company did not hire anyone from the event. He told me he believed the company did not have a genuine intent to hire from the event and that the company only wanted to attend for appearances.

Allan also stated that he had been asked to attend another similar HBCU recruiting event and refused. He said he did not want to be used as the Black front-facing representative for an event where candidates were not actually being hired.

After this conversation, I shared the HBCU comments with coworkers in real time.

The next day, Allan messaged me in Teams.

Visible message states:

I responded:

“I really did! I appreciate you so much! You have no idea!”
